About me

In the last year I was very attracted to web development. I have been consuming a lot of creative content and courses on the internet. I started to put into practice everything I learned, I began to understand how web development works. But this year I decided to move to the next level, to become a junior web developer.

You have here a few things about me to help you understand what kind of person I am:

I am a cooperative person, good team member, I am patient and creative, also I am a constantly learning, I like to learn new programming languages, I pay attention to details and more.

I think I can work with anyone and that's why I consider myself a good team member and a reliable employee.

Freelancer - Freelance

Remote (from home) | IT Hardware | IT / Telecom

For the past 4 months I've been working on some projects for some clients where I could challenge my skills and learn new things even about me. One of the most important projects I worked on is my portfolio where I learned that sometimes you could remain stuck at some point for hours but having a short break could help me to find a solution. I also learned how to "play" with JavaScript in various positions and to do a lot of things with it.

In freelance I had some mini-projects where I made websites or mini-games such as happy bird, Quiz game or presentation sites. In order to create the above mentioned I only needed HTML - to base the sites but to base the mini-games/apps too, CSS - to style them but also to make them responsive and JavaScript - to make the mini-games/apps to work properly.

In order to publish some mini-games or websites I used the GitHub platform and always when I had to make a change to the portfolio or what I needed only to change that code or directly from the platform or load new files with the respective changes.
